Focus on MENA Region

■ The Industry

Before 2009, Middle – East was seen as one of the fastest growing regions in terms of steel consumption, thanks to the infrastructure development and construction activity all over. The region was net importer of steel and CIS, Turkey, China were the preferred suppliers. During 2009 meltdown, the regional economy got a jolt and the developmental activity drastically reduced followed by reduction in steel consumption. Now 5-6 years later, the region is gradually stabilizing in terms of industrial activity, infrastructure projects and the steel consumption is also rising slowly. The Middle East and the North African region, commonly known as MENA, are considered to be one of the fastest growing regions as regards industrial and economic activity. The oil price crash had reduced the pace of the economy but now with gradual increase in oil prices, the industry sentiment is also turning positive. As such the region offers tremendous opportunities on a long term basis.

■ The Event

MENA region has been a traditional and one of the most important trade partners for

India and it is true for iron & steel industry as well. The common items exported from India include ferro alloys, billets, HR & CR coils, steel pipes, steel plant equipments and even skilled technical manpower. India imports iron pellets, TMT rebars, scrap etc. Many Indian executives are working in various steel producing and processing plants in the gulf and helping the regional economy progress. Also, a lot of Arab entrepreneurs are exploring the possibility of investing and participating in the growing Indian economy.
